This guide features a collection of resources for TANF administrators and other practitioners on career exploration and assessment, career pathways and sector strategies, and labor market information. These resources may be helpful for those working with TANF recipients and low-income families in connecting their clients to jobs with wages that support self-sufficiency.

There are four types of resources included in the guide:

- Research Studies
- Technical Assistance Resources
- Client Assessments
- Data Sets Related To Education And Employment

This document provides detailed summaries of each family self-sufficiency research project that was active or newly funded by ACF during FY17, along with brief overviews of past projects, and highlights select findings released in 2017.

The studies in this report are organized into five sections:

- Temporary Assistance for Needy Families
- Employment and the Labor Market
- Education and Training
- Behavioral Science
- Cross-Cutting and Other Safety Net Research
